Only the beginning of this booklet is acceptable. It provides a solid information about all the steps needed, to set up a blog. And even there, one could argue the author's opinion, that free domains don't allow for cool enough address, for a blog, to be taken seriously. It was proven many times over, that it is a content of the blog, that attracts the readers, not the address of it. But this issue is minor. The huge one is, that this author suggests the wannabe bloggers, to google popular topics, pick one of them and provide the blog about it. If the blogger doesn't know the topic, he needs to google the information needed. If the blogger doesn't want, or can't write, he may hire a ghost writer, to produce the blog. The blogger only needs to ensure, that a lot of keywords and cute pictures are included. Once the blog is up and running, the blogger have to start selling "stuff" to his readers. Author suggests, to sell blogger's own "stuff", but if blogger doesn't have anything to sell, then he can make money selling other people's "stuff". It is explained in detail, how to set it up. Well,

I have a big problem with all that. Everybody knows, that a blogger needs to be passionate and knowledgeable about his/her topic to be able to write anything of value. If they need to google their information, they will not be able to deliver any content above sixth grade science report. Well meaning, mostly correct, but dull and boring. No matter who is hired to write the content. To me, the entire process of creating a blog for a sole purpose of selling things to unwary, leaves a bad taste in my mouth. By all means, it is absolutely legal. It is done all over, by many. But is it ethical?
